

Contents

PART ONE – DENMARK

40 years of medieval archaeology at Aarhus University

The first ten years – why and how

The future for the past

Communication, landscape and settlement in the Norse North Atlantic

The setting of everyday life in Viking-Age Scandinavia

Medieval archaeology and the National Museum of Denmark – today

The professionalization of medieval archaeology in Denmark – from the enthusiastic amateur to a medieval archaeologist at every museum

The bare bones of medieval archaeology

PART TWO – SWEDEN, NORWAY, FINLAND AND NORTH ATLANTIC LANDS

Historical archaeology in Sweden – from the Middle Ages to Modernity

Medieval archaeology in Finland – its emergence and political context

Defining the medieval in Icelandic archaeology

Christianity, churches and medieval Kirkjubøur – contacts and influences in the Faroe Islands

Norse Greenland – research into abandonment

PART THREE – ELSEWHERE IN EUROPE

Viking archaeology in the 21st century

Castles, nobles and living conditions – sources for and interrelations between aspects of medieval daily life

Conceptions of domestic space in the long term – the example of the English medieval hall

The development of Lübeck into a medieval metropolis

Archaeology and a complex historic event of the Nazi period – the Berlin sculpture find